

WRITING WOES: How To Avoid Them And Get It RIGHT Next Time! (New Age Book 2)

Writing Self Help Suffering countless rejections in your writing career? Perhaps you're trying to write in the wrong genre or sphere. Whilst your perseverance is admirable, maybe it's time to find out if you're aiming for a genre entirely unsuited to your skills and talents. Use this little palmistry guide to point you to an area of writing more suited to your true talents and thus give yourself a greater chance of success, whether as a traditionally published author or as an indie. The ancient art of palmistry is there to guide you -- if you have an open mind -- and may well lead you to the genre of writing which best suits your talents. Why not give it a try? What have you got to lose? In my earlier life as a writer, I persevered with writing short romantic novels, when all the time, a little voice inside me said I ought to try writing crime (clearly, my imaginative HEAD LINE wanted the chance to try a bit more plotting: a point echoed by rejecting editors, whose comments tended to be of the -- Too much plot and not enough romance, type! Eventually, I paid heed to what that little voice and the rejecting editors, had said, and turned to writing crime novels. And, under my Geraldine Evans name, I succeeded in having seventeen of these published (Macmillan, St Martins Press, Worldwide, Severn House), as well as an historical, Reluctant Queen: About the little sister of infamous English king, Henry VIII (Hale). Who knows, but that you, too, might find greater success when you direct your talents in their true direction? WEBSITE/BLOG: <http://geraldineevansbooks.com>
